Statement of the Case

Mary Smith brings this case against Ride the Rail, Inc. for an incident which occurred on January 1, 2018 in the railroad yard located in Ohio. At that time, Smith was employed by Ride the Rail as a conductor and claims to have sustained a permanent injury to her right leg when she fell while dismounting an engine.

Smith claims that Ride the Rail was negligent by failing to provide her with a reasonably safe place to work. More specifically, she claims she fell as a result of oil on the sole of her work boot which she picked up while working in the rail yard.

Smith claims that as a result of the fall, she underwent three surgeries to her right leg and missed over ten months wages. She also asks for compensation for the pain, suffering, and disability.

Ride the Rail denies it was at fault for the fall, and claims that Smith was negligent. Ride the Rail also disputes the nature and extent of the claimed injury and disability.

Familiarity with the Case

- Do you have any prior knowledge of the people or events of this case?
- Talking about the case?
- Overhear anyone?
- Media reports?

Potential Witnesses

- Jane Green
- James Red
- Tom White
- John Yellow

Familiarity with Parties / Witnesses

- Know anyone?
- Have you, an immediate family member, or close friend worked for, or dealt with, Ride the Rail?

FELA

Congress has passed legislation allowing railroad employees to bring these actions in courts such as this under a law known as the Federal Employers' Liability Act. Federal laws and regulations control the duties of the parties to this lawsuit, and the applicable law will be given to you by me later in the trial.

Workers' Comp

In a workers' compensation claim, money is paid to an injured worker simply because he was injured on the job. To receive workers' compensation benefits, no one need be at fault. This is not a workers' compensation claim, and in order to award money to Plaintiff, Plaintiff must prove that Ride the Rail is at fault for his injury. Do you understand this difference?

Other Situations

Have you, an immediate family member, or a close friend had any work experience or business dealings with railroad companies?

Other Situations

Have you, an immediate family member, or a close friend ever sustained a leg injury?

Claim for Injury or Illness

Have you, an immediate family member, or a close friend filed a claim against your employer for any reason?

Filed a WC claim?

Legal / Medical Experience

Do you, an immediate family member, or a close friend have any special training or experience with the law, medicine, or economics?

Damages

Do any of you have a personal, philosophical, or religious problem with awarding damages if Plaintiff proves his case, or with returning a verdict for Defendant if Plaintiff fails to do so?

Your prior courtroom experience

Have you ever been involved in a lawsuit (civil or criminal) as:

- Plaintiff or Defendant
- Witness
- Juror

Can you be fair?

- Does anyone have a bias for or against those who bring a lawsuit?
- Or those who are sued?
- Treat both sides the same?

Bias or Sympathy

Can you set aside bias or sympathy you might feel for either party, or any personal experience, and reach a verdict based on the facts presented in the courtroom?

Instructions of Law

- You will be provided with written instructions on the application of the law to your deliberations.
- Will you follow the law as given to you by me in this case?
